if you're not happy single, you won't be happy in a relationship.

true happiness comes from closing 100 chrome tabs after solving an obscure programming bug, not from someone else

For some, that "someone else" may be their "obscure bug". That is to say, it is possible to find happiness in the interaction and be unhappy in the absence of one.

I dunno, with someone else you get to discover 100s of new relationship bugs that you would've missed out on otherwise.

"Solving" all of those by closing out the relationship doesn't work so well, though.

Never underestimate the value of reproducible test cases.
